

Jesus' death was to save humanity, and his crucifixion was like a sacrifice. Without his death on the cross, Christians would not be able to forgive, because the crucifixion restored peoples broken relationships with God. As Christians believe he was the Messiah, without him, there wouldn't have been any parables or miracles, so Christians would have learnt a good way to live their life. There would need to be another Messiah who taught them, for them to learn how to forgive.
